Back to Normal, Sort Of

Considering that we hadn't shot a match in over two months, the match on May 16 went pretty well. As far as I know, nobody tried to put bullets in their gun backwards, and only a handful kept clicking their pistol after it was empty. But then again, some of us didn't know how to count to five before the virus break, so that probably didn't have anything to do with it.

Clubs all over the country went into hiatus over this thing. Some did so because the owner of the property where they shot demanded it, and some, like us, did it out of an abundance of caution. The Ridgecrest Gun Range Association never closed, and the RRV range has always been available to club members so long as social distancing is observed. End of Trail is cancelled, so you can't accuse SASS and cowboy action shooters of not taking it seriously.

Businesses that are reopening, or are about to reopen, are seeking protection from lawsuits of the "You said it was okay for me to come to your store and I got sick so you owe me money" variety. Our country has become "sue happy" anyway, as more and more people take the position that if anything bad happens to them, it has to be somebody else's fault, and that somebody owes them several million dollars. You know those lawsuits will be forthcoming. I hope the politicians figure out a way to protect businesses. Not to mention clubs.

So, barring some unforeseen development, it looks to me like we will probably have to keep doing things pretty much the way we did them on the 16th. For how long, nobody knows. As Death Valley Rose states in her article, we do want input from RRV members.

Six-foot social distancing isn't all that hard to do. Having said that, I know I broke the barrier a time or two while running the timer, but I will improve. We all have to try to do it the best we can.

THE RRV SHOTS AGAIN!

By

Death Valley Rose, RRV # 38

After much discussion, and Cowboy Earl doing in-person research with the RR Bar club, it was decided that some fresh air and exercise would go a long way towards curing "cabin fever" among the members of the Robbers Roost Vigilantes.

So a plan of action was made, we'd meet at the Range, wear masks, and observe the mandated distances.

The usual suspects, plus the newest Vigilante, the brilliantly named "Sir MissAlot" showed up ready for a long-awaited day in the sun.

A suggestion that we experiment with two small posses, thus cutting down the time spent in the heat, was approved. Nasty Newt and MC Ryder each led a group of seven valiant souls to their assigned stages, and the action began.

As hoped, the smaller than usual posses were fast! Where the full component of shooters would have finished the six stages around noon, the smaller ones were done shooting by a smidge past 10AM!

It turns out that, with only one person loading at a time, everyone working at whatever was needed - counting, timing, unloading, picking brass, scoring or helping with props, things went easily and swiftly. It was a bit chaotic at first, but soon settled into a routine of people doing those chores without needing reminding.

This way of shooting doesn't work if people sit around gabbing, but leaves lots of time afterwards to "rag chew" and you get done before the worst of the heat.

Will we continue with the smaller posses? I suspect that will be another topic of discussion, so chime in if you have an opinion or three.

I don't know what the future holds. One expert says black, the next expert says white. I wish I didn't think their opinions were politically motivated.

We're on Summer Hours, so any matches announced will start signups around 7:00, and we'll try to have the meeting by 7:45 unless otherwise announced.
